

Following the protection of the Mexican domain

Article Overview

Mexican domains, including .MX and .gob.mx, are protected through strict registration rules, security measures, and legal frameworks to prevent unauthorized use and ensure intellectual property compliance.

Domain Registration and Security

The .MX domain registry is managed by NIC-Mexico, which oversees registration, renewal, and transfer processes. Domains can be registered for 1 to 6 years, and certain subdomains like .gob.mx are reserved for government entities . To prevent unauthorized transfers or theft, the registry supports Domain Theft Protection, including lock and suspension features, bulk management options, and verification of identity through official documents and signed letters . Additionally, inter-registrar transfers require telephone verification and physical proof of identification . Deleted or expired domains enter a redemption period, during which the original registrar can recover the domain for a fee, often higher than the original registration cost . Grace periods exist both for initial registration and automatic renewals, allowing limited time to reverse operations if needed .

Legal and Intellectual Property Considerations

Domain protection in Mexico is closely linked to intellectual property rights. The Mexican Institute of Industrial Property (IMPI) handles trademark registration and enforcement, which is critical for preventing bad faith domain registrations that infri...
