

How much does it typically cost to install wiring in an electrical control cabinet

Article Overview

Wiring for an electrical control cabinet typically accounts for about 50% of the total panel cost, with labor and materials ranging from $2,000 to $6,000 depending on complexity and size.

Factors Affecting Wiring Costs

Labor and time: Wiring is labor-intensive and usually consumes about half the total time required to assemble a control panel. Labor rates vary by region and electrician experience, with industrial electricians often charging $40–$120 per hour. Complex panels with custom layouts, advanced automation, or remote monitoring features increase labor costs.

Materials: The cost depends on wire type, quality, and quantity. Standard wiring costs $6–$8 per linear foot, while structured wiring for communication or control systems can add $2 per foot. Low-voltage wiring is cheaper, around $0.40–$0.62 per foot. Bulk purchasing can reduce material costs by 15–35%.

Panel complexity: The number of I/O points, modules, and cabinets directly affects wiring costs. Adding 10–20% extra I/O points for future expansion increases material and labor requirements. Special enclosures or unique cabinet shapes also raise costs.

Certifications and compliance: Meeting UL, CE, or other industry standards adds to the cost. Initial UL site training can cost around $2,800, with annual certification fees of $2,468, plus additional expenses for inspections and nameplates.
