

Huijue Fiber Optic Cable Composition

Article Overview

Huijue fiber optic cables are composed of optical fibers with protective coatings, bundled into cores, and encased in multiple layers of sheathing, sometimes integrated with power lines for composite applications.

Core Optical Fiber Structure

Huijue fiber optic cables use optical fibers consisting of a glass core and cladding, designed for total internal reflection to transmit light efficiently. Each fiber is typically coated with acrylate polymer or polyimide to protect against mechanical damage without affecting optical performance. These fibers may be arranged individually, in ribbons, or in bundles, and are surrounded by a resin buffer layer or core tube to form the cable core, providing structural integrity and protection from environmental stress .

Protective Layers

The cable core is further protected by multiple layers of sheathing, which can include water-blocking materials, strength members, and outer jackets made of durable polymers. These layers enhance tensile strength, abrasion resistance, and environmental durability, allowing the cables to operate in indoor, outdoor, or industrial environments .
